The Sean Costello Memorial Fund for Bipolar Research

Mission

Uniquely focused on the needs of musicians with bipolar disorder, The Sean Costello Memorial Fund for Bipolar Research supports and conducts research on bipolar disorder and creativity while promoting awareness, providing education, and serving as a resource for these musicians and their support systems in order to foster acceptance, functioning and health.

The Sean Costello Memorial Fund for Bipolar Research

Executive Summary

2015 was a very productive year with several important milestones. The earliest was the donation of Sean Costello at The Magic Shop, a CD of music found in the archives of Steve Rosenthal, a grammy awarded producer and owner of the Magic Shop in New York. Steve also produced Sean's self-titled acclaimed CD. All of the proceeds of the sale of the CD go to the Sean Costello Fund. Steve was a close friend and mentor of Sean. His generosity to the Fund and love for Sean is sincerely appreciated by both his family and the Board.

It is also the year that we concentrated on recognizing the creative aspect of our mission with the Magic of Creativity Award, given to Lauren, a young woman who was diagnosed with bipolar disorder while in college. She was given art supplies by her parents and found that art was her way of stabilizing her moods. To put it in her words, art started as a hobby; however, after applying for the grants she “realized that art is not a hobby for me. Art is a means to survive. Art is a means to thrive.” She is using the award money to support a greeting card initiative, For Those Who Struggle. The cards bring appropriate sentiments for someone dealing with a mental health issue, something that is not currently available. Artwork and poems are donated by people with a mental illness. We wish Lauren the best and are proud to have been able to support her creative and thoughtful venture.

One of the things that stands out as a highlight of the year is the Fund's ongoing relationship with CREST. BD of the University of British Columbia, Vancouver. Headed by Erin Michalak, (PhD), CREST. BD is an amazing resource for people with bipolar disorder. The Sean Costello Fund participated in a research project in Vancouver which resulted in a published article. To share their findings, Erin and Sheri Johnson (PhD UC Berkeley) held a webinar in which they explained their findings. The Fund's association with CREST. BD, along with Sheri and Erin, are testaments to the value of our mission. We are grateful for their continued support.

We were privileged to hold our 7th Annual Celebration of Sean Costello at Northside Tavern supported by the generosity Elyn Webb, owner of Northside, as well as Robert Lee Coleman with The Bluesfish, Holliday Brothers, Cody Matlock Band, and Garrett Hollins, musicians who donated their time to support the mission of the Fund and to honor Sean's memory. This is our biggest fundraiser every year and serves as the foundation of our ability to give grants and offer programs. It is always a happy evening with great music. Sean's presence is felt by many who attend.

The Gift of Hope initiative was never realized, as we had no applicants despite widespread announcement by our Science Advisory Committee. Hopefully, we can revisit that program with greater success in the future. We were able to grant a $20,000 award to Bipolar In Order, a program that offers free educational programs to help persons with bipolar disorder augment their current regime of medication and therapy. It shares approaches aimed at enabling those with bipolar disorder to recognize triggers and learn ways to handle their moods. The testimonials of those who have participated in the program support the positive impact the program has had on management of their disorder.

The work of the organization is due to many volunteers and donors; however, the engagement of the board is the keystone of our success. My heartfelt appreciation goes to all of those who have supported the work of the Sean Costello Memorial Fund.

Best,

Glenn Smith, President

CD CELEBRATION OF SEAN COSTELLO IN THE MAGIC SHOP

Saturday, January 17, 2015

Come celebrate the Magic of Sean in the Magic Shop with Paul Linden and Ray Hangen, members of the original recording band, along with long-time band-mate, Matt Sickles on bass. Special guests include renowned guitarist Bill Sheffield, along with talented guitarists Dave Gross and Greg Gumpel, traveling all the way from New Jersey. Other surprises are planned. This is the only time you will be able to experience a live performance of the talented musicians who along with Sean create the magic of this amazing CD. Food by the famous Fat Matt's Rib Shack!

A portion of the proceeds will go towards 'Create the Magic' a program to help creative artists with bipolar disorder obtain tools they need to practice their art form while helping to balance the mood swings of this challenging disease. The Sean Costello Memorial Fund is an all volunteer, 501c3 organization. Donations are tax deductible according to IRS guideline.

MENTAL HEALTH: PREDICTORS AND PREVENTION

May 3, 2015

Do you have a plan for your mental health? We have a test to measure your stress level, and a ton of information on brain/body health connection. We've also provided a calendar for the month of May, Mental Health Month, that makes balancing life and health easy!

ARE YOU HEALTHY?

In 1948, the World Health Organization defined health as "a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity." How realistic is it for us to live in a state of complete well-being?

"Reality is the leading cause of stress amongst those in touch with it." — Jane Wagner

FACTORS AFFECTING MENTAL HEALTH: STRESS

The World Health Organization's definition is applied to all areas of health, including mental health, viewing your health as a reflection of you as whole. If you could separate mental from physical health (more about that later), you could look to the level of stress in your life to see how much there is to threaten your state of "complete well being." So, in order to see what may be threatening your health from this vantage point, you can take an assessment by filling out the test offered by Dartmouth: <http://www.dartmouth.edu/~eap/library/lifechangestresstest.pdf>

MAY 7 IS NATIONAL CHILD MENTAL HEALTH AWARENESS DAY

"Adolescence is.. the high-risk period for onset of major psychiatric disorders that persist into adulthood. In particular, mood disorders in youth account for a substantial proportion of disability and premature death in those aged 10–24 years." (Duffy, Anne. Evidence-Based Mental Health. 2015; 18(1):7-9)

Adolescence is also a time of behavioral and hormonal changes that can be worrisome, but are often part of the normal transition to adulthood. In Ms. Duffy's article, she reviews a method of projecting the seriousness of those behaviors, with a prediction for their following your child into adulthood. She states further that "A confirmed positive family history of recurrent melancholic depression or bipolar disorder in a first-degree family member is the single most robust risk factor predicting the development of mood disorders in young people." In essence, family history is the greatest predictor of future mental illness. The following link's graphic demonstrates how history and symptoms can be used to stage adolescent risk. Staging Adolescent Risk

If there is one thing you can do for you and your children this month, it is to investigate your family's history, including your own battle with depression or anxiety. Putting your child's challenges in the context of your family can help you have an important conversation with your healthcare providers. The schematic in the attachment is one way for you to assess your child's risk for problems as an adult. It is a certainty having your family's mental health history can improve the future health and happiness of your child.

The Sean Costello Memorial Fund for Bipolar Research

Of course, there are many other disorders that can arise during childhood, e.g. ADHD; however, the serious adult issues of schizophrenia, major depressive disorder and bipolar disorder are harder to diagnose and predict their severity in conjunction with adolescence. Their late diagnoses may have serious consequences. While you're considering braces, tennis lessons and math tutoring, take time to enrich your knowledge of your child's mental health risks.

You Can Make a Difference!

- Take care of yourself. You can't help anyone if you are struggling.
- Think of people you know and care about and try to assess where they are emotionally. Offer help, if only a phone call.
- Volunteer – It helps you as well as the intended.
- Help Reduce Stigma by understanding what a mental illness is, and convince others that it is a biological malfunction, not a personal failure.
- Donate to the research for advances in mental health. One of those four people is probably someone you care for. Research is HOPE, and there is not enough of it : US Budget for Mental Health

RESEARCH AS A MISSION

The Sean Costello Fund has research in its name and, from the beginning, research as its primary mission. Why research? The long and the short of it is because, as one psychiatrist told me: "Our toolbox isn't very full."

Putting it into perspective for the creative person, they are 10 times more likely than average to be challenged with BD, with occupations that prove difficult with compliance in a disease where compliance is a known issue. There is little that is known about why there is a higher incidence, or how this population may need to be treated differently. Certainly, we are talking about people who, by and large, don't fit into the mainstream in occupational hazards or personality. In fact, many times, creative people feel they are different, and often suffer with social anxiety. Add that 50% of people with BD have an addiction to alcohol (I've seen no stats on other substances); and, reflect on the availability and incidence of drug and alcohol abuse in the creative fields, especially music, the questions are even greater.

For one, we need to know how to handle a dual diagnosis when medications are seen as hindering the creative process. The one thing we do know, through the research of board member Dr. Ishan Salloum, is that both the BD and addictions have to be addressed simultaneously. This is not the current practice in many facilities, and wasn't in the one Sean was a patient in. The impact of losing some of our best and brightest in the creative fields is startling and depressing. The identification of people who have BD and died tragically seems to grow daily.

We are privileged to have worked with the best in the world on this subject and this August 19th, we are presenting the first webinar of the Fund, revealing what we have learned and what we need to learn. Please join the webinar to see what your donations have accomplished and how much more there is to learn. Without your support, this would not have been possible.

LAUREN'S MAGIC GIFT

Account of First Awardee of The Sean Costello Memorial Fund's Magic of Creativity Award

I was in college when I had my first manic episode. I had had depressive episodes before, and I had a suspicion that I had bipolar disorder, but the symptoms had never been as severe and as prevalent. All my life, I had thought that my parents wanted me to be successful, because success is happiness. I began to learn that success does not necessarily bring happiness. Instead, happiness is in and of itself a form of success.

At that point, I changed focus. I became determined to develop a greater sense of self, by developing hobbies and working to not feel lonely when I'm alone. Growing up, I had enjoyed art. This year my parents bought me a few art supplies for my birthday, and I dove into my hobby. When I was manic, I would draw all night. When I was depressed, I would write poetry.

Art became an outlet. I learned how to balance my life, via my outlet. When I heard about The Magic of Creativity Award through the Sean Costello Memorial Fund, I didn't think I'd win. I almost didn't apply; in my mind, why would a hobby win a contest? But in the end I figured, what can I lose?

Through the process of applying, I realized that art is not a hobby for me. Art is a means to survive. Art is a means to thrive. Art, in addition to healthy habits, therapy, and proper medication, has helped turn bipolar from a death sentence to a reason to live. I am thankful for the Sean Costello Memorial Fund for helping me turn a disabling condition into a new beginning.

I am using the funds to begin the greeting card company, For Those Who Struggle, which will confront mental health issues directly, resulting in the public's higher awareness of mental health issues and a deterioration of stigma. For Those Who Struggle will feature art and poetry created by people with mental health disabilities.

For more information on For Those Who Struggle greeting cards, please email me at ftws.greetingcards@gmail.com

"I had the privilege of meeting Lauren in person and seeing her artistry. Lauren had finished several years of college in one of the toughest majors before her disease interrupted her studies. She shared her drawings with me, demonstrating a gift for illustration. The prototypes for her cards were poignant, beautiful really, in their content and intention. Lauren herself is beautiful, articulate, humble and generous. She arrived with a gift for me: a gorgeous painting of Sean. Each time I meet a special, gifted, sweet soul like Lauren, I am reminded of Sean and his struggles. He didn't survive them, not without a valiant effort. Helping the Laurens of our world find that place where they can thrive is my hope. It's how Sean's spirit lives for me. Thank you, Lauren, showing me your strength and reminding me of the oft-forgotten beauty of bipolar disorder. I will certainly be one of your first customers!" — Debbie Costello Smith

ALL I WANT FOR CHRISTMAS

December 25, 2015

It's Christmas Eve and I haven't made my Christmas list. I told everyone that there was nothing I needed that I didn't have, and that is true. But there is a difference between want and need, isn't there? I can't say I really need anything, but what do I want? I have my two front teeth... yes, I wish they were straighter and whiter, but I'm not wearing dentures yet! If I were running for Miss America, I would surely say that I wanted world peace. I can't argue with that wish, wouldn't we all want to have peace, especially since the turmoils of the world seem to be getting closer and closer to each one of us? I'll never be in a beauty pageant; even if I were, how can I effect world harmony? Ultimately, I think a kinder world starts with me. Continue reading...

ORIGINS

April 20, 2015

Two weeks ago, we celebrated significant holidays of two major religions: Easter and Passover. Easter, of course signifies the Resurrection of Christ giving believers the promise of a new life, a rebirth. Passover is a remembrance of Yahweh's saving the Jews from one of the plagues He placed upon the Egyptians to ensure their release from slavery. Lamb's blood was placed over the door of the Jews, and the Angel of Death passed over it; thus, saving their firstborn. Interestingly, Christ is often referred to as the 'Lamb of God.' Easter's iconic representation is a bunny delivering eggs and gifts to children in baskets on Easter morning. Today, Easter may be celebrated without the religious connotation, simply a reason to celebrate. In researching this tradition, I found that the roots go back to pagan rituals honoring the onset of spring, with both eggs and rabbits representing life and fertility. It may not be coincidental that each of the religious holidays falls at the beginning of a season of hope and new beginnings.
